

Extract from the script:

Man: Do nothing and go nowhere, easy enough.

Woman: Dreading the void.

Man: And wherever I go, in the entire universe, I always meet,
out of myself as in myself,
the unfillable void, the unconquerable nothing.

Woman: Everything is false, there is no one...
There is nothing.

Man: I have only the idea I have made of myself to sustain me on oceans of nothingness.

Woman: For the only way one can speak of nothing is to speak of it as though it were something.
The emptiness must be empty of something?

Man: We wake up and see no interest.
We discern this fact with indifference.
We say that this is due to our disinterest.
We eat breakfast and get dressed.
And we make contact.
And we escape into some work.
We pick up an axe or a pencil.
Or we sit down at a desk.
Or we rush to the airport.
Or we drink endlessly.
Fundamentally we wake up with indifference.
No matter if we are alone or not.

Woman: Clear.
Cold and clear.

Man: I can't imagine going on when there are no more expectations.

Woman: Who reflects too much will accomplish little.

Man: It would be better if nothing would have come into existence.
They do not understand that we walk, the landscapes are changing.

Woman: You and your landscapes!
Tell me about the worms!

Man: I believe I have a first sentence.
